Key Quotations	Notes
“The values embodied in Pickfair are a fraud, and we all know it. Fairbanks and Pickford did not live happily ever after in a storybook romance. . . Franklin and Carnegie left behind libraries that remain with us; the principal legacy of Pickford and Fairbanks is made of deteriorating celluloid, fading pictures of a world that never was” (178). What seems to be the author’s tone toward the dream that Pickfair (and those like them) created for Americans? What does Cullen do to create this tone?	<hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/> <hr/>

What are Cullen’s claims about the American Dream?
